

Nursing Home Abuse

Nursing homes are supposed to care for our loved ones, and keep them safe. Their staffs, we are told, are well trained and professional. In many cases, this is indeed the case. But not always. When facilities are improperly maintained or understaffed, when training or oversight is inadequate, when residents are not cared for in a reasonable manner, injuries and even death can result. Patients get the wrong medicine, they fall, they are neglected. Nursing home abuse can be terrifying to the victim – and horrifying to those who love them. We help them fight back. Our lawyers have handled numerous nursing home abuses and understand the laws, procedures, and regulations that the owners and managers of these facilities are obliged to follow. We have the resources not only to investigate each matter we take on, but to litigate it aggressively and tenaciously – for as long as it takes to reach a just resolution for our client. These are highly emotional cases, and they can be complicated, too. An experienced lawyer with a track record for success can help to obtain compensation – and lay responsibility. Contact Babbitt, Johnson, Osborne & Le Clainche for a free consultation and case evaluation.

What are some of the signs of physical abuse? What are some of the signs of neglect? What can you do?